

IAN BREMMER

Political storm watcher

... a separatist movement gains momentum in South America ...

rebels re-arm in the Congo ...

an election brings a new party to power in Eastern Europe ...

United States opens discussions in trade with China ...

We live in a community of interdependent nations. The stability of New Delhi affects the stability of New York. It's a complex balance. You can read the headlines, watch the news and still not have a complete picture of what's happening ... and how these trends affect foreign policy. Everything moves so fast. Slow it down with Ian Bremmer.

TRIBUNE
MEDIA SERVICES
www.tms.tribune.com

Crisis forecasting • Economics • Elections • Emerging markets
Foreign policy • International strategy • Leaders • Organized crime
Power struggles • Terrorism • Volatile borders

Stay ahead of the political storm with Ian Bremmer.

At 35, Bremmer has a long career ahead of him ... there's no telling where his skill and access will take him. Here are some accomplishments thus far:

- President of global political risk company Eurasia Group
- Senior fellow at the World Policy Institute
- Creator of first political risk index on Wall Street, the "Deutsche Bank Eurasia Group Stability Index"
- Contributing commentator on CNBC, CNN, CBS MarketWatch and FoxNews
- Author of three books and a regular contributor to publications, including the New York Times, the Los Angeles Times, the International Herald Tribune, the Harvard Business Review, International Affairs and the New Republic

A LOVE OF INTERNATIONAL POLITICS

Former Stanford academic and columnist for the Financial Times, Bremmer diligently explains the causes and likely effects of political and economic events. His enthusiasm and clear writing make him a readable op-ed writer that will help you build a community of loyal readers eager to know more about their world.

FORWARD-LOOKING ANALYSIS

Using a rare combination of political science expertise, high-ranking sources and compelling writing, Bremmer explains the latest political storms and why they're important. He raises warning flags on key issues before they explode. He helps readers understand that their world is not THE world. His column discusses the long- and short-term impact of key issues ranging from elections to ethnic tensions in hot spots around the world.

SOURCES ON THE GROUND

Bremmer doesn't comb through the news media to figure out what's happening. Instead, his column topic is guided by sources in government, law and business who deliver real-time details on political events and trends. Bremmer's hundreds of contacts in 191 countries give his column an insider's depth and credibility. No hit-and-run punditry here.

INTELLECTUAL AUTHORITY

Called an "academic wunderkind" by Fortune magazine, Bremmer is trusted by heads of state and prime ministers (as well as opposition leaders) for his thoughts on global foreign policy issues and political risk. He has advised Japanese national security advisor Kawaguchi, Turkish Prime Minister Erdogan, the Bush (43) administration, the Kerry campaign in the United States and others.

TRIBUNE
MEDIA SERVICES
www.tms.tribune.com

435 N. Michigan Avenue, Suite 1500
Chicago, IL 60611 USA
+1-312-222-4444 • F: +1-312-222-4991

London
+44-20-7588-7588 • F: +44-20-7638-3011

Hong Kong
+852-2901-8900 • F: +852-2865-3238

Contact your TMS representative at +1-312-222-4444 or tmsales@tribune.com to subscribe or to purchase a one-shot article.

Ian Bremmer, bc-bremmer, is available for immediate release.
Read samples and take delivery at www.tmsfeatures.com.
Outside the United States, visit www.tmsinternational.com.